Publishing groundbreaking academic content shouldn't come with financial uncertainty. With Paradigm's article processing charge (APC) – based model, your journal can achieve sustainable growth while you remain focused on delivering impactful research. We manage the complexities, provide expert guidance, and share the financial risks – ensuring a seamless path to success.

What is an article processing charge (APC)?

An APC is a fee charged to authors by a journal or publisher, enabling their work to be freely accessible under the open access model.

Typically, this cost is covered by the author's institution or research funder.

The benefits of APCs for journals:

- Support open access: Contribute to the global open access movement.
- Eliminate paywalls: Cover publishing costs while making research freely accessible.
- Generate revenue: Create an additional income stream for your journal.

Partnership highlights:

- No upfront costs: Revenue is generated through APCs, and your journal receives an agreed share of each fee.
- Risk-free publishing: Paradigm takes on financial responsibility for APC revenues and budget management of services.

- Comprehensive suite of services: Covering editorial support, production, and marketing services.
